FOR CUBA

The Three Friends Sails on Her Fourth Trip With Arms, Men and Amunition,

Three Friends is for the fourth time off for Cuba with munitions and recruits for the insurgents. The steamer sailed at 1 o'clock this morning while Locke, urging the latter to detain the vessel. Judge Locke refused on the ground that the law gave him no authority to seize a vessel on suspic-

When the Three Friends left Jacksonville she carried 1,500 rifles, 400,000 cartridges, 800 matchetes, 600 revolvers, 50 Hotchkiss guns and a quantity of powder and dynamite. At Arlington, on the St. Johns River, eight miles below Jacksonville, the Three Friends came to and was boarded by nearly 100 men, mostly Cubans, who had rendezvoused there. These men were commanded by Julian Farraga.

It is said that Colonel Leite Vidal, who was on the Bermuda on her last trip to Cuba, was a member of the expedition. Captain N. B. Broward, who commands the Three Friends, has already landed three expeditions in Cuba. On the Three Friend's last trip she was chased and fired on by a Spanish crusier and returned the fire. is doing well. As Captain Broward told a friend good by, just before sailing, he said:
"The Spaniards will never take me alive, and if they kill me I will take some of them down with me,"

Last fall Miss Musselman began to feel ill.

Shout the great benefit her daysher has rived from Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. As the days passed the decline in her health became more apparent, she became very weak, and at length feared a total collapse of her system. Miss Musselman is a dressmaker. In the early stages of her illness she found that she was unable to do the usual amount of sewing. As the ailment became more pronounced, she was at times too weak to work at all, and she had to take involuntary holidays. She became listless, took little interest in her surroundings, and finally was forced to give up sewing altogether. The greatest change took place in her physical appearance. The roses in her checks fidled away, a chalky paleness supplanting them, her eyes lost their brilliancy and she began to lose weight steadily.

Her symptoms gave her great alarm and she consulted her fumily physician, one of the best of the medical fraternity in the city.

supplanting them, her eyes lost their brilliancy and she began to lose weight steadily.

Her symptoms gave her great alarm and she consulted her family physician, one of the best of the medical fraternity in the city. He prescribed all sorts of medicines but his patient did not improve. Her nervous system seemed to be completely shattered. She could not sleep at night because of the nervousness, and her appetite was affected. She dismissed the attending physician and engaged another, also of good standing in his profession. He, too, did all that science and a long experience could suggest, but like his predecessor failed to benefit Miss Musselman, who in despair, engaged the services of a third physician. But his treatment gave no better results than did the others. Under the care of these physicians, Miss Musselman would sometimes think she was getting better but the relief was only temporary, and, after a brief respite, she would have all the old symptoms again, generally in an aggravated form. Their medicine would cause nausea. The disease which baffled them tightened its grip on her. She had a choking sensation in the throat, frequently a dull pain in the head and a storpage of the nose.
